A good story is told of a Battl capitalist who commenced speculating when he was quite young. A knower friend of his father owned a handsome bronze inkstand, which this youthful capitalist was very much juterested in. He used to spend considerable time in the office and was always looking at the inkstand. One day, the lawyer, thinking the young ster admired it, said, "Billy, would you walke that inkstand?" If guess I would, said the boy. "Well, you are a good boy and you can have it." So the man of law washed the bottle out and gave the stand to the boy who next day came into the office and remarked, "I made a good thing on that inkstand, sold it for a quarter." The Court House'at Elleworth has been well attended recently by those interested in the famous case of S. K. Whiting, vs. the city of Elleworth. It was an action to recover mone c paid for taxes in the year 1890, which the plaintiff claimed was illegally assessed, because, as he has also claimed, he was a resident of the town of Eden at that time, and bot of Ellsworth. The verdict was declared for the city. For several years past, it is claimed, a few of the wealthy citizens have thought it best to move out of town for a week or two in the spring while the assessors made up the taxes, claim a residence in some adjoining town, where the percentage is low, and then return to Elisworth to live and entry on their business. In the year 1890 some terrible kicking was done by some of the business men, and it was decided to test the legality of those proceedings. Several of these gentlemen who trace to dodge their taxes were compelled to pay. Of course, they did so under protest, and Mr. S. K. Whiting brought this sent against the city. It is said that several other gentlemen who had similar tax cases have allowed them to be quossuited and agree to pay the costs.

also from Brooksville, who, she alleges, promised to marry her and did not, but married another young lady. The testimony as to her wounded affection and blighted love was pathetic, and won the sympathy- of the audience. Mr. Haskell, of the other hand, endeavored to show that Miss Black had received too much attention from other men during their engagement, which made him resolve to leave her as he did. Friday morning the Reviving an Old Falsehood. The Philadelphia Press says: The death of Judge Badley has given the Democratb newspapers an opportunity to repeat their falsehoods concerning the Electoral journession of 1877 and the decision, which placed Rutherford B. Haves in the Prosidential chair. The utter falsity of the motives, ascribed to the dead Judge in voting as he distand the untrustworthis Prepared From Pure Wintergreen. ea-ily recognized by those informed con-cerning the history of that time. The chol impudence of these Democratic falsifier in asserting that deverybody adthat "Mr. Tilden was legally chosen President" is tharacteristic of the party, from which it comes. Such statements are gross misconstructions of the facts. The developments made in recent years and the confessions of Democrats themselves are unanswerable proofs that the decision of the Electoral Commission was not only legal but equitable as well. Samuel D. McEnery, who is now running for Gover-nor of Louisiana, and ex-Senator Eustis, have boasted on the stump of the whole-sale butchery of Republican voters by the Democrats in the campaign of 1876 in or der to carry the State for Filden. The State was made to run with blood that Democracy might triumph, and in rightng this wrong the Returning Board only secretised its legal and necessary powers.

If the Democrats were wise they would pessent this matter to pass into oblivion, call the Democratic attempt to purchase a Presidency after the effort to win it by Cruelty to Lobsters. It is singuar how the cruel practice o' boiling lobsters alive continues. Odi forefathers—and, indeed, our parents— let caives bleed slowly to death, on the theory that in no other way could white meat be secured, and later on calves were bled ore day and killed the next. Now every one knows that a calf can be killed in a brunane manner and the veal made just as good. Hogs are largely killed by electricity instead of by the old burbardus method; and, generally a caking, anemals killed for food have been jut out of the way in a mach more brunant amonter; that formeth. FOR CAST FORTUNE BY CHRISTIAN REID

"I will do my bes. to help you, Mr. Der-went," he said. Derwent ever afterward declared that his mother simply and absolutely fell in love with Don Maurizio at first sight There could be no doubt that she was as favorably impressed as he could have de-sired with the handsome man whose perfect blending of worldly polish and frauk cordiality could not have failed to charm even the least susceptible to the effect of nanner. Sibyl di l not besitate to affirm that she had never before seen so prince iy a man, and that the admirable result. of a wound in the shoulder were daily becoming more apparent to her. Don Manrido, on his part, was evidently, much pleased with Derwent's friends— with Mrs. Derwent's delicate refinement with Mr. Derwent's deheater renoement and SibyPe spirited charm. He was most courteonsly prompt in paying his respects, accompanying Derwent, who lost no time in seeking him, back to the hotel for that purpose. His caughter, he said, would give herself the pleasure he said, would give herself the pleasure of calling later, and hoped the ladies would drive with her on the Paseo that afternoon. "For myself," he said, "I sometimet take out an English dogcart, and if either or both of you gentlemen will accept a seat with me, I shall be very happy." Both invitations were accepted, and waiving Mrs. Derwent's reaswed thauks for her son's great debt of sindness, the stately haccendado bowed himself away. himself away.
But if D in Maurizio had awakened enthusiasm in the breasts of these explorere from the states what can be said of the effect which Dona Zarifa produced, with her surpassing beauty enhanced by a toilet fresh from the hands of the most consummate artist in Paris? Derwent, who had found that he could not trust himself to speak of her, had said very inthe of her personal charms, and so Sibyl's eyes turned upon him with a look of amazement and interrogation which almost provoked him to laughter.

"What die you mean by not preparing us for such a vision as this?" the look said: And indeed that perfect face, framed by a hat which was a mass of soft, carling plames, was enough to provoke the inquiry. Yet to Derwent's eyes nothing could ever frame it so well as the graceful Spanish drapery in which he had seen it first, although he was glad that these critical feminine eyes should behold his princess in all the bravery of modern picturesque costuming.

Great is the effect of wealth. Who does not know this? Yet, to a nature not readily or deeply impressed by the accidents of life its wonderful effect is a standing marrel which custom cannot stale. Derwent said to himself that if Donn Zurifa had been stripped of every accessory of fortune her noble beauty and still more noble character would have been none the less evident to him, and none the less adorable in his eyes. Perhaps he was right—though the test would be a severe one, even for a k ver— but at least he had no reason to expect to find such eyes in others. There was nothing surprising in the fact that Mrs. Derwent was more struck by the surroundings of the young heiress than by her remarkable loveliness. The luxurious carriage which awaited them, with its handsome horses, liveried servants. and every appointment perfect as if for Hyde Park, brought home to her more vividly than all of Derwent's words the position and wealth of the people with whom his good fortune had associated him. As he passed the equipage on the Paseo, Derwent could not but smile at the expression of his mother's face as she lay back on the softly cushioned seat, regarding with a look of perfect satisfaction the brilliant scene of which she was a part. He was not surprised that, when they met at dinner, Sibyl's enthusiastic ad-miration overflowed all verbal, bounds. "She is simply the most beautiful creature that I have ever seen!" she said, referring to Zurifa. "I really did nothing but stare at her: for she is a perfect picture of loveliness. And when her eyes light up, and she makes that fascinating little Mexican salutation with the fineers she is utterly behive him. the fingers, she is utterly bewitching. Geoffrey, if you were to swear until you were black in the face that you did not fall in love with her when you were out at their place, I should not believe you." "There is no need for me to subject myself to such an unpleasant test, then, Sibyl,"answered Geoffrey calmly. "But I may be allowed to remark that it I may be allowed to remark that it would be as sensible for me to fall in love with a royal princess as with Dona Zarifa. She is the greatest heiress in Mexico, and will no doubt make a great alliance."

"There is a very huckneyed proverb "There is a very hackneyed proverby which it strikes me might have an application in this case," said Halbert. "We know what is said of a faint heart and a fair lady. The fair lady is here. May not the faint heart be also?"

"I really do not see," observed Mrs. Derwient "why it should be supposed that for any would 'hesitate to offer himself to any wongan, even if she is a great brivess. No one who knows him could manner thim of an interested mo-does not venture."

"I am unable to perceive where the question of presumption comes in," said Mrs. Derwent majestically.

Derwent did not reply, for he was indeed partly amused and partly irritated to perceive that his mother, having been distinguished in her long obtained. deet party amissed and party irritated to perceive that his mother, having been disappointed in her long cherished hope of seeing him marry Sibyl Lenck, had now conceived the brilliant idea of an al iance with Dona Zarifa. She would have shivered at the thought of a Mexican marriage before coming to the country, and especially before! Dona Zarifa's westith and beauty had dayned upon her, but now her imagination was eagurly at work. The romance as well as the solid advantage off such a match allured her greatly. It was evident that she would not resulty relinquish an idea so fracinating. Derwent, who felt too sick at heart with the hopplessness of his passion to argue with or haulf at her, strove to avoid the subject, and Sibyl, who was soon keen enough to perceive this, kindly seconded in a stort.

When they parted after their drive, Don Blauristo had said to him: Come to see me tomorrow moralogs! would like its seals well.

On lift auriso had said to him: "Come to see me tomorrow morning (would like to speak with yel or a matter of business." And Derwent lost in time the neat day in feeping the appoint ment. Well, my friend's reply was so flatter ug that some day I will show it to you. On y one thing in his letter puzzles me a little. "I have lately in-herited a considerable estate from my father, and I have also come to Mexico to endeavor to make money in ventures which I hope may not prove perilons. If you were not so kind I should besitate before intruding my private affairs upon you; but since you are good enough to take an interest in me, I hope you will let me explain why I have found it necessary to take this step."

recessing to take this step."

'You spoke to my daughter, I think, of a debt of honor,' said Don/Maurizio, whose clear eyes were reading the young man's face as if they would read his soul.

'Yes," the latteri answered, "and the story of that debt of honor is known at present to only one person in the world besides myself—that is my cousin, Mr. Halbert. With your permission I will tell it to you."

Then in the briefset manner possible he told it. The few, simple words were strong with feeling, and stronger still with purpose, as Don Maurizio, istening with an interest far removed from corrosity, perceived. When the story was fin shed he held out his hand; "I will to my best to help you, Mr. Derwent," be said. And no other expression of confidence was recessary.

Now, he added, after Derwent nad expressed, his thanks, "let us consider the best means of helping you—that is, of enabling you to accomplish your end in the shortest time possible. And here comes that my besness proposal. You were, I believe, v. ry fasorably impressed with the value of the bliens Experanza?

"I have never seen a better mine." Derwent answered. "Nothing is needed but the proper application of scientific methods to realize a great fortune from it. But I have understood that Senor Barrera will not sell."

"He will not, but the other owners wil. Their stores of the mine have been "Simply one thing," replied Derwent without a moment's hesitation—"that I accept it gratefully. I confess that it changes my plans materially, for my original intention was not to work mines in Mexico, but to sell them. As soon as I saw the Buena Esperanza, however, the desire, but to sell them. As soon as I saw the Buena Esperanza, however, the desire to develop its splendid hodes came over one. Yet if I had taken the mine at that time I should have resisted the desire, partly because I could not afford the accessory dutlay of capital, but chighly because I wanted to realize money quickly. Now, however, that immediate need is relieved. Time will be given me in which to pay the debt, and I think I can venture to rick the capital requisite for working."

"If you are inclined to allow me a share in the mine" said Maurizio, "I will assist you to wark it."

"I shall be delighted on allow me a share in the mine "said Maurizio, "I will assist you to wark it."

"I shall be delighted on a low you whatever you wish to take," Derwent replied. "Could I do less when it is to you I am indebted for the whole? Do you trims I am indifferent to the fact that you have stood aside in order to benefit me."

"I am to busy a man to undertake mining asyself," the other said, smiling, "but with you as an active partner I have long known the value of the Buena Esperanza.
